Renault ZOE wins for a sixth-consecutive year at the 2019 What Car? Ceremony

London (United Kingdom), 23rd January 2019 – New record yesterday for the Renault ZOE who won 'Best Electric Car for under £30,000' at the annual evening of the famous magazine What Car?. A title kept since 2014. Incredible! This reward adds to its growing list of UK and Europe-wide industry accolades. With more than 60 awards in Europe, ZOE has once again convinced the jury members with offering a real-world range of 300 km.

"ZOE is available with a choice of trims and motors, giving our customers the opportunity to choose the ZOE that best fits their lifestyle. That's the key reason why ZOE has been presented with a strong list of awards and it's gratifying to see the model recognised by What Car? for a sixth year in a row" explain Vincent Tourette, Managing Director of Renault UK.

Since 1978 the 'What car? Car of the Year' ceremony is among the most respected in the UK automotive industry. Steve Huntingford, Editor of What Car? magazine and jury member, said:

"Our 2017 Electric Car of the Year is still attractive two years later, it's some achievement given the pace at which things are moving in this class. In our Real Range tests, the Renault ZOE outperformed other sub-£30k pure electric options with many much pricier options."
